THE INTERNATIONAL CENTRE GOA

GENERAL

The world today is rapidly moving towards an economic and security related integration that transcends national boundaries. This has resulted in the partial, or total, marginalisation of existing blocs that were forged either due to a shared security perception, that grew out of colonial linkages, or were established due to a perceived need for increased cooperation. The new world order has never been defined precisely, probably because there is no clear concept of what it involves. It is important, therefore, for us, as a people, to assess exactly where we have progressed to and to clearly define the role we must equip ourselves for, in the years to come.

On one level, there is room optimism, in our democratic traditions and for hope, in the opening up of our economy. In preserving our tradition of democratic functioning we have, often enough, had to compromise, due either to an imperfect understanding of our priorities, to the pressures of populist politics or to the absence of a shared national objective. Further, the collapse of the Soviet Union has left the world with the problem of managing the aberrations which were, and are, the product of on-going confrontation. All this, coupled with the gradual erosion of the institutions of the State, have resulted in increasing concern about our ability, as a Nation, to manage change - social, economic and political- and to hold together and further develop our potential.

Goa, of all the States in India, symbolised the strengths we can draw on. Centuries of colonial domination resulted in the gradual evolution of a distinct identity which is the symbiosis of not only religions but of different cultures, which is reflected in its villages, comunidade laws, rapid literacy and the ability to integrate, to assimilate and to synergise differing priorities and perceptions into a harmonious way of life.

The International Centre, Goa, was conceived as a forum to bring together thinkers, scholars and academics, achievers, sociologists, industrialists and creative people from India and around the world, to look at the larger issues before the New World and to develop new techniques and perspectives for handling them. The Goan diaspora has resulted in a visible Goan presence world - wide, which is a great source of strength and inspiration. Special attention will be given to Goa's distinctive requirements.

The Centre provides facilities for local, national and international meetings, seminars, conferences and workshops, initiated directly or in collaboration with national and international organisations and bodies. Particular emphasis is laid on the future needs of Goa and of India. The Centre also hosts cultural events and stage performances of dance, theatre and other cultural activities designed to promote, encourage and preserve our Goan and National heritage.

The Centre seeks to anticipate, rather than react to, emerging trends and problems, to promote a better understanding and to put topical issues in their correct perspective and is perceived as an important component in working towards the growth of a harmonious and integrated Society.

LAND

The Government of Goa has leased an 14.5 acre plot to the International Centre, Goa adjacent to the Goa University Campus. It overlooks the confluence of the Zuari River with the Arabian Sea and is within a ten minutes driving distance from Panaji City, the Capital of Goa.

FINANCING OF THE CENTRE

The Centre is a plan scheme of the Planning Commission of India and the Government of Goa. National and international foundations have also contributed grants for the project. The balance of the cost has been met by donations and Membership fees both corporate and individual.

ORGANISATIONAL SET - UP
